

LONGWOOD GARDENS

Sue Burke began writing professionally as a teenager for her local newspaper. By then she was also an avid science fiction fan. She has worked for newspapers and magazines as a reporter and editor and began publishing fiction in 1995. She has also published essays, poetry, and translations, and taught English to Spanish teenagers in Madrid, Spain.

Where she's lived: Milwaukee, WI, born there in 1955; Austin, TX; Madrid, Spain; and Chicago, IL. She is married and has no children or pets, just house plants who have trained her well.

Publications: More than 30 short stories, along with a million words of journalism and other non-fiction; and translations from Spanish into English including short stories, novels, poetry, and historical works from the Middle Ages and Renaissance.

Education: University of Wisconsin Milwaukee, 1976; Clarion Science Fiction and Fantasy Workshop, 1996; Master's-level Diploma in Translation, Spanish into English, from the Chartered Institute of Linguists Educational Trust, 2013. Winner of the 2016 Alicia Gordon Award for Word Artistry in Translation from the American Foundation for Translation and Interpretation.
